Manager Comment

US stock benchmarks reversed direction from September and finished the second half of October with upward momentum. All three major indices closed the month at record highs led by a better than 2% gain in the Nasdaq Composite. Third quarter earnings reports seem to have taken control of market direction from the daily moves of Treasury yields. For the most part Technology company earnings have been good, but supply chain bottlenecks have hurt some companies in the short term. Despite an investment environment with a multitude of factors impacting market direction, inflows of capital have returned to the equity markets in October, driving the averages higher. October saw the yield curve flatten with the 2-year note yield recording its largest monthly rise since April 2018 and the 30-year bond seeing its largest monthly decline since July.

The Castlestone FAANG+ UCITS fund recorded a strong October. The fund was led higher by the astonishing 43% monthly gain in Tesla Inc. The company's stock rallied on the news Hertz rent-a-car would purchase 100,000 vehicles and develop its own charging stations. FAANG+'s top holdings are Alphabet Inc, Netflix, Facebook Inc., Apple and Amazon.com.
