Manager's Comment

Rising Treasury yields, weak economic data out of China and weak trading volumes all contributed to a tough August for the US equity market. The three major stock indexes wrapped up a volatile month with the large-cap S&P 500 index suffering its first monthly loss since February, while the Nasdaq Composite logged its first down month of the year. The powerful artificial intelligence-led rally that helped drive US equity prices for most of the year took a breather in August. Only two of the eleven S&P 500 sectors posted a positive return in the month. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note neared a 16-year high in August before rolling over late in the month. The dollar rose around 1% in August on the back of the spike in yields, gold fell by more than 2% and oil ended the month higher.

The Castlestone Next Generation fund moved lower in August as spiking Treasury yields put pressure on equities. It was the fund's first negative monthly performance since April. The fund's top performing stock on the month was Regeneron Pharmaceuticals. Next Generation's top holdings are Roku Inc, Tesla, Zoom Video, Exact Sciences and Trimble Inc.
