Manager's Comment

October brought a variety of market-moving news for investors to digest, including the war in the Middle East, the start of Q3 company earnings reports, and a surge in Treasury yields. The spike in yields came as the fact that the US economy continued to surpass expectations was outweighed by the "higher for longer" mantra from the Federal Reserve keeping bond buyers on the sidelines. The technology sector was volatile over the month but put in the second-best performance of any sector in October, helped by Microsoft which posted its best month since May and was the best performing stock in the Dow after posting strong earnings. All three major US averages closed lower in October, posting their third down month in a row for the first time since 2020. Utilities were the only one of the eleven S&P sectors to post a gain for the month. Gold prices traded around $2,000.00 an ounce in October, a level the precious metal hasn't seen since May. Oil prices posted their first monthly loss in five months as rising US inventories and global recession fears hurt prices.

The Castlestone FAANG+ UCITS fund fell during October but is up 24% on the year. FAANG+ outperformed the S&P 500 and Nasdaq Composite in the month. There were no changes to the fund's holdings in October. FAANG's top performing stock in the month was Snap Inc. The fund's top holdings in October were Amazon.com, Meta Platforms, Netflix, Apple, and Alphabet.
